[REDACTED] is seen less and less around the Fontainebleau and "the boys" are not going there now because [REDACTED] feels their presence there is bad for business.

[REDACTED] nor his "friends" have any interest in the the Johnina Hotel; however, this does not appear as a matter of record. The Dream Bar does the best business on the Beach.

[redacted] stayed at the

FRANK SINATRA has really quieted down on orders from ROBERT KENNEDY. He and JOE FISCHETTI are allegedly separated and no longer are friendly. This is strictly for publicity purposes to take the "heat" off both of them. When SINATRA appears in Miami Beach all the "boys" will turn out to see him, but will try to do it in such a way that it receives no publicity.

JOE FISCHETTI was not there.

With respect to the SS Lucky, he heard it has been in Jacksonville almost two weeks. He learned this ship, supposedly is the old SS Evangeline; that it is supposed to be in the name of JOE FISCHER and that FISCHER's name is allegedly in the log of this ship. The ship he saw at the Dade Dry Dock, which he thought was the SS Lucky had a "Big letter L" on the smoke stack.

With respect to the other gambling ship, he noticed a ship was all lit up on the night of March 18, 1965 and it was just about opposite the Fontainebleau Hotel. He was told this gambling ship was in the name of JOE FISCHER and Company, that it was formerly named the Excelsior when it was a LST boat; was sold as well as converted in December, 1963. The name of this ship is presently not known to him. It allegedly has 100 state rooms. He was told a ferry boat from Hallover Beach took passengers out to the boat.

[REDACTED] He was told that JOE FISCHETTI's car, before this trip, was always parked there. He thought the type automobile [REDACTED] could be determined at Palm Beach.
